Monthly Commentary

Bond Markets. In 2024, our fund delivered a return of +5.3% in USD, significantly outperforming the benchmark US Aggregate (ETF: AGG), which returned +1.3%. The key to achieving this performance was our active approach, focusing on leveraging tactical opportunities. We are confident that such an active strategy will remain relevant in 2025. Bond market volatility is likely to stay elevated, making it challenging to generate returns with a passive buy-and-hold approach. From a macroeconomic perspective, the US economy remains in excellent shape, as evidenced by labor market strength (growth in non-farm payrolls and job openings). Inflation in the US, EU, and UK has stopped declining, and there are risks of its acceleration due to stable wage growth and strong oil prices. An additional source of uncertainty is the actions of Donald Trump as president (e.g., introducing tariffs or annexing territories). We believe the first 1-2 months following the inauguration will be critical for markets as political factors come into play. Another negative for bonds is the stance of major central banks (the Fed and the ECB), which have increased discussions about the possibility of slower rate cuts. All these factors are expected to contribute to high volatility in the bond market.

Portfolio. Since the beginning of January, we have been tactically maintaining short positions in long-term US Treasuries, with a portfolio weight of 10-20%. The portfolio's current duration stands at -3. The remaining funds are allocated to T-bills. Tactically, we see no reasons to purchase bonds before Trump's inauguration and believe that a further move toward the yield highs reached in October 2023 is the most likely scenario. Additionally, we anticipate risks to other asset classes stemming from rising US Treasury yields.
