February 2025

Monthly Commentary

February 2025 was a month of mixed performance across global risky assets. US Equities were down against the fears of Trump's newly imposed import tariffs slowing the economy, along with concerns about whether US tech companies can sustain their current earnings. Despite a backdrop in the US Equities, EU Equities continued to rise with financials stocks leading the way thanks to strong earnings and defense stocks rallying against expecations of EUC increasing military spending in light of continued tense negotiations with Trump administration on ceasefire between Russia and Ukraine. The US Treasuries benefitted from becoming the "flight to safety" trade against the ongoing economic uncertainty and recession worries in the US, significantly outperforming the EU Government bonds, where economic growth sentiment was more positive, against the hopes of ceasefire between Russia and Ukraine.

Despite mixed performance across Equities and Bonds, the Fund continued to do well in February, with NAV increasing by 0,9% bringing our year-to-date performance to 1,0%. The world of economic uncertainty and elevated volatility creates ample opportunities for our hedge fund strategies to capitalize on. Amongst these strategies, our top perfromance contributor was the FX algo-trading strategy, in which we recently increased our allocation. We benefitted from both the performance of strategy itself and the currency effect, as the position is EUR-denominated. Furthermore, two of our litigation strategies were also strong performance contributors. One litigation finance strategy in the UK, focused on short duration claims, continues to do well on the back of opportunities in car finance claims space, while our US litigation strategy continues to accrue benefits of numerous civil law cases (revolving around environmental contamination, medical injuries and contamination damages), thanks to a network of strong law firms and leads. In terms of our portfolio positioning, we haven't made any significant changes and continue scouting for new ideas.
